Smoke Testing. Smoke Testing is a software testing technique performed post software build to verify that the critical functionalities of software are working fine. It is executed before any detailed functional or regression tests are executed. The main purpose of smoke testing is to reject a software application with defects so that QA team does not waste time testing broken software application.

Sanity Testing Vs Smoke Testing: Introduction & Differences

It is the facility's responsibility to ensure that only properly trained and competent persons perform inspections, testing and maintenance on its fire alarm system [see NFPA 72(10), Sec.10.4.3]. Typically, facility personnel are limited to performing inspection and some basic testing activities only. The amount of testing that can be
